Helping Young Children Succeed at Circle Time

Circle time can be a special part of the day—building friendships, sharing stories, and learning as a group. But for some children, especially those with developmental delays or disabilities, sitting still and staying focused can feel overwhelming. The good news is that with a few small changes, circle time can be more comfortable and successful for everyone.

Why Circle Time Can Be Hard

Some kids struggle with sitting still, paying attention, or waiting their turn. Others may feel overwhelmed by noise, lights, or being too close to others. These challenges don't mean they aren't trying—it just means they need extra support to feel calm and safe.

Simple Supports That Work

- Adaptive Seating: Floor cushions, wobble seats, or marked spots can help children feel grounded and know where to sit.
- Sensory Tools: Fidgets, weighted lap pads, or dimmed lights can reduce stress and help kids focus.
- Visual Supports: Picture cards, “first-then” boards, and timers give clear expectations and help children understand what's happening.

- Movement Breaks: Quick stretches, songs with motions, or even letting a child stand at the edge of the circle can help them stay engaged.
- Keep It Short: Circle time works best in short bursts—mix listening, moving, and talking, and end on a positive note.

Why This Matters

Circle time isn't about sitting perfectly—it's about connecting and learning together. When teachers adapt their approach, children feel included, supported, and excited to participate. This creates a stronger classroom community where all children can succeed.

Creede Repertory Theatre-Tiny Tour

We're excited to welcome Creede Repertory Theatre's Tiny Tour to our office on Friday, September 19, 2025, with performances at 9:00 AM and 1:00 PM.

Each show runs about 25 minutes and brings big storytelling in a small package. Perfect ages 5 and under.

CAMPSITE 12

Ray is ready for a relaxing, solo camping trip in the great outdoors. When an unexpected guest arrives, Ray's trip starts to look a little different. Can our two unlikely friends work together to set up camp? This 25 minute show is designed for our youngest learners (2nd grade and younger) and is filled with audience interaction, camping chaos, and problem-solving!

The Tiny Tour will be joining our Young Audience Outreach Tour in Fall 2025. Book both performances and reach more students! The show is in alignment with Core Curriculum concepts for Early Childhood development, and National Core Arts Standards.

Coaching

Play vs. Academics: Finding the Balance

Many teachers feel torn—should they focus on play, or should they focus on academics?

In their book Complementary Curriculum Approach: Transform Your Practice Through Intentional Teaching, Iris Chin Ponte and Lisa Porter Kuh talk about this challenge. They explain how play helps children explore, create, and grow, but teachers are also asked to teach academic skills that can be measured by tests. Their answer is the idea of a “settled classroom.” This is a space where children can choose activities that excite them, spend time exploring, and learn together as a community. Teachers play an important role too, guiding children’s interests and helping them dig deeper into learning.

Why This Matters

Understanding how to balance play and academics is important because it helps children grow in all areas—not just test scores. Play builds creativity, problem-solving, and social skills, while academics build knowledge and confidence. When teachers create classrooms that include both, children are more engaged, less stressed, and better prepared for future learning.

Creativity is intelligence having fun.
